

Jack Moore

Managing Partner, Evans Consulting

As one of Evans's Managing Partners and a co-owner, Jack's primary responsibilities are making sure our people have the opportunity to develop as leaders and ensuring they have access to the resources needed to meet our mission. His real passion, though, is promoting Evans's talented team and sharing our empathetic and evidence-based brand to anyone that will listen.

Jack is open about having ADHD. But he's learned to channel this "super-power" to fuel his curiosity and courage, and encourages others to use neurodiversity to unleash zany ideas that can become transformative and innovative solutions for our customers' and Evans own challenges. He's also an extreme extrovert, using his WOO to build strong relationships with Evans employees, customers, and partners. You can frequently find him wandering around the office, or out in the business community, striking up engaging conversations and building lasting friendships.

Charisma is not his only talent. Jack has nearly thirty years of government and commercial consulting experience across a variety of industries. He has a BA in Economics and a Master of Business Administration (MBA), both from Duke University. He is a certified Lean Six Sigma Black Belt and Project Management Professional (PMP).
